World War 2 – 1944

John Thompson Strategic analyst - quotes from his book "Spirit Over Steel"

Dec 25th: Elements of US 77th Division make another landing on Leyte. 4th US Armored Division leads Patton's relief effort towards Bastogne while the British 29th Armoured Brigade and the US 2nd Armored Division go after the 2nd SS Panzer Division at Dinant, inflicting severe losses on it. The American Army remains justly proud of the speed and aggressiveness of the men in III Corps of Patton's 3rd Army when they drove towards the relief of Bastogne. When Private Paul J Weidorfer's platoon of the 80th Division is pinned down in the open by two German machinegun posts near Chaumont, Belgium; he makes a solitary charge through intensive fire. Miraculously unhurt, he kills everyone in one post with his rifle and grenades and accepts the surrender of the second after starting to assault it too. He is later awarded the Medal of Honor while in hospital recovering from wounds sustained in February 1945

Dec 26th: The 4th US Armored Division blasts into Bastogne and the encirclement is broken. The Japanese sortie two heavy cruisers and six destroyers to bombard the US beachhead on Mindoro – and lose a destroyer to a US PT boat before departing without accomplishing their mission. The IJN will not be back in the Philippines again. Lieutenant John R Fox is a forward observation officer in the 92nd Division in Sommocolonia, Italy. Early this morning, German infantry percolated into the town and then assaulted the rest of it in force. As the American troops withdrew, Fox stayed behind to call in artillery fire, finally deliberately calling it in on himself as he is overrun. When the Americans re-enter the town, Lt Fox's body is found amid 100 Germans. He is posthumously awarded the Medal of Honor.

Dec 27th: The British counterattack into the Bulge continues with the UK's XXX Corps savaging what remains of 2nd SS Panzer. The US tries out its very first guided bomb on a railroad bridge in Burma. A Hungarian nun, Sára Salkaházi, learns that the pro-Nazi Arrow Cross Party has just raided the safehouse in which she has hidden hundreds of Jews over the past few months. She willingly returns to be shot along with the current quartet of hidden Jews found by the militiamen. In 1972 she is named Righteous Among the Nations; in 2006 she is beatified by the Pope.

Essential Reading: Let's be honest, most of us who read history for pleasure are drawn by the appeal of a good narrative and a fascinating story: Lieutenant General Brian Horrocks, who commanded XXX Corps during the Ardennes was viewed by many American, British and Canadian generals as the best Allied corps commander on the scene, has the power to fascinate and his biography is gripping. One might add that the portrayal of him in the 1977 film "A Bridge too Far" by Edward Fox was quite accurate. Any library would be considerably enriched by Warner Philips' 1984 biography Horrocks: The General who led from the Front.

Dec 28th: Like any politician trying to make a virtue out of necessity, Hitler pronounces himself satisfied with the progress of the Ardennes Offensive and brings offensive operations to a halt, ordering the salient to be held against continuing American and British counterattacks. He convinces himself that the Ardennes fighting must have weakened American strength to the south of the Salient and orders the start of an offensive called Operation Nordwind by Army Group G into Alsace and Lorraine against the 1st French and 7th US Armies.

Dec 29th: A new Greek regency is announced. A quiet day in the Bulge as everyone is getting ready for the next Allied attacks. The Soviets get infuriated when their emissaries to negotiate the surrender of Budapest are killed (although nobody knows for certain how it happened); but the city is now completely encircled by 2nd Ukrainian Front, with elements of 3rd Ukrainian Front and a Romanian Army Corps at hand. Hitler planned for the Knights Cross with Swords, Diamonds and Gold Oak Leaves to be the highest standard of the medal (saving the unique one held by Goering), with only 12 planned recipients. The only award of the medal is made today to the renowned Stuka pilot Oberstleutnant Hans Ulrich Rudel, possibly the most destructive airman there ever was. According to Luftwaffe records before his surrender to American troops in May 1945, Rudel destroyed 519 tanks, 150 self-propelled guns, 800 other vehicles, a battleship (Marat), two cruisers and a destroyer, 70 landing craft or assault boats and four armoured trains. Unusually for a Stuka pilot, he also shot down 9 aircraft. He'd also been shot or forced down (invariably by flak) some 23 times, occasionally behind Soviet lines; yet he always escaped.

Essential Reading: Hans Rudel's Stuka Pilot is an engaging memoir of a legendary pilot and his wartime experiences, although it was originally published with some controversy: Rudel's memoirs were among the first published by a German serviceman for the international market and he offered no apologies for being a member of the Nazi Party. Once widely available in paperback, most surviving copies are rather dog-eared although some versions of the 1990 hardcover edition are still available.

Dec 30th: Patton's VIII Corps starts a new attack to retake Houffalize. 2nd and 3rd Ukrainian Fronts start fighting their way into Budapest. Anna Afanasyevna Morozova just turned 20 when Germany invaded, and she ended up behind their lines. At first, she became involved in a partisan network in the Western USSR that used Soviets, Poles and Czechs to amass intelligence. When the Soviet Army rolled through, she finally put on a uniform and became a sergeant and a radio operator. This night, her headquarters is being raided by German troops, and she knows she would be a prize prisoner, so she takes a grenade and secures her secrets into death. She becomes a Heroine of the Soviet Union.

Dec 31st: Moscow announces that their Lublin Committee of tame Polish stooges is the provisional government of Poland. Re-Liberation Day for Rochefort as XXX Corps enters the town, freeing it for the second time. Hungary declares war on Germany. The Japanese on Leyte stage a violent series of Banzai attacks, signaling the virtual end of conventional resistance in the campaign. 70,000 Japanese have died on the island and 30,000 more await mopping up in remote parts of the island while 15,500 US troops are dead, wounded or missing. The Germans kick off their last offensive in the West as Operation Nordwind begins.
